2. Min. Black lead or graphite; one of the allotropic forms of carbon. used for pencils, also, mixed with clay, for making crucibles; and for many other purposes.

'Black lead' is the popular, and 'graphite' the strictly scientific name, but the term 'plumbago' is largely used in the arts, esp. in mining 1784 KIRWAN Elem. Min. 158 Plumbago, Resublim. Bygelis of the Swedes. In a strong heat and open fire it is wholly volatile. 1786 *tr. 3. Bot. A genus of herbaceous plants, inhabiting Southern Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, having spikes of subsessile flowers, with a tubular five-petaled calyx, leadwort so called from the colour of the flowers. [Pliny's name (rendering Gr. Μολύβδαινα), adopted as generic name by Tournefort, 1700.] Also attrib.

CHALMERS Tyvo Saga vi. 53 He distributed twigs from the plumbago plant to be worn round the neck. 1903 Contemp. Rev. Mar. 346 Pale blue plumbagos, yellow caniansis

[Note. In Dioscorides, μολύβδαινα, f. μολύβδος lead, was applied to a mineral substance (v. 97, 100), and a plant. The former was yellow oxide of lead (PbO), esp. the litharge produced in the extraction of gold and silver from ore, containing lead. By Pliny this is latinized as molybdæna, also once (xxiv. 18. 50) by plumbago, which, as well as galēna, were applied by him to the yellow oxide, but plumbago included as an inferior variety the sulphide (PbS), called by Dioscorides μολύβδου λίθος, 'lead-like stone', the modern GALENA. For the plant Pliny always uses plumbago. In the French transl. (1572) of Matthioli's Commentary on Dioscorides, μολύβδαινα = plumbago is rendered plombagine, in It. plombagine, and is stated to be identical with litharge; but other ores may have been included. Thence the explanations of the word in Cotgrave and other English writers down to Bailey. see PLUMBAGINI, and sense 1 above. In Holland's Pliny, plumbago is rendered litharge. In the 16th c., to Agricola and others in Germany practically interested in mining, plumbago mainly meant the sulphide of lead, but also included other substances similar to this in appearance, and in the property of staining the fingers and making paper, esp. the native sulphides of antimony and molybdenum, STIBNITE (Sb₂S₃) and MOLYBDENITE (MoS₂), and the mineral graphite. In 1567 Christoph. Enkel (Encelius) of Saalfeld, while identifying Pliny's molybdæna, galēna, and plumbago, distinguished the 'productive' species (i.e. the oxide and sulphide of lead) from the 'barren' (sterilis), which yielded no lead, and was mainly graphite; the latter was described by Ferrante Imperato in 1599 as employed in the grafio plumbago, 'lead pencil'. In 1779 Scheele found that certain samples of the 'barren' plumbago, on being burnt, were dissipated into carbonic acid gas, and that in fact they consisted of carbon. see quot. 1786 in sense 2. In 1789 Werner and Kaisten proposed the name GRAPHITE instead of the ambiguous 'plumbago'. But its composition was still disputed. An analysis, made by French chemists in 1786, had given, after volatilization, a residue of iron, and plumbago was pronounced a carburet of iron (see quot. 1795). This view prevailed until Kaisten in 1826 and Selstrom in 1829 proved that the iron was only an impurity in the specimens analysed, and that graphite or plumbago was, as Scheele had said in 1779, really a mineral form of carbon. Pn-, an initial combination occurring only in words from Greek; the p is usually mute in English. (The p is pronounced in French, Spanish, Italian, German, Dutch, and other European langs., also by Englishmen in reading Greek. It is to be desired that it were sounded in English also, at least in scientific and learned words, since the reduction of pneo- to neo-, pneu- to new, and pny- to ny-, is a loss to etymology and intelligibility, and a weakening of the resources of the language.)

Pneo- (pnī'ə, nī'ə), combining element from Gr. pnē-eiv, pnēiv to blow, breathe, used in a few rare scientific terms.

Poëtria occurs in a scholium on Horace Epist. i. i. 103, written (according to O. Keller, Pseudogr. c 650, perh. in North Italy, and preserved in MSS. of 10th c., also in 9th or 10th c. MSS. of Martinian Capella. It is used as the title of treatises on the art of poetry, esp. the Novia Poëtria of Galfredus de Vinsauf (Galfredus de Vins Salvo, also called Galfredus Anglicus) about or soon after 1200, and in various works of the 13th c., as the Græcismus of Eberhardus Bethuniensis c 1212 (Arte poetria fungor dum fungo poema), the translation of Averroes' paraphrase of Aristotle's Poetics by Hermannus Alemannus c 1260, and the Catholicon of Joannes de Janua, 1266 ('a poëta, poetica, et hæc poëtria ars poetica') (I. Bywater) The relation of the word to L. poëtria, Gr. πομπρία, poetess, is not clear, but, from its antiquity, its formative suffix cannot be identified with F. -rie, Eng. -ry, -ry, in such words as chirurgery, drollery, bigotry, ministry Our earliest English examples are from Chaucer, to whom the Novia Poëtria of Galfredus was well known, as he makes the Nun's Priest refer to it in his Tale (l. 527) and apostrophize the author as 'O Galfred deere Maister souerayn']

Its matter, long and short syllables, and feet composed hereof, with words furnished by grammar; and its form, the arrangement of all these things in just and agreeable verse, expressing the thoughts and sentiments of the author. 1755 JOHNSON, Poetry, metrical composition; the art or practice of writing poems 1838 THIRLWALL Greece II. xii 126 The first period of Greek poetry is entirely filled by the names of Homer and Hesiod 1906 J. W. MACKAIL (Communicated). In general, the essence of poetry as an art is not so much that it is rhythmical (which all elevated language is), or that it is metrical (which not all poetry is, except by a considerable extension of the meaning of the word), as that it is patterned language. This is its specific quality as a 'fine art'. The essence of 'pattern' (in its technical use, as applied to the arts) as distinct from 'composition' generally, is that it is composition which has what is technically called a 'repeat'; and it is the 'repeat' which technically differentiates poetry from non-poetry, both being (as arts) 'composition'. The 'repeat' may be obvious, as in the case of rhymed lines of equal length, or it may be more implicit, to any degree of subtlety, but if it does not exist, there is technically no poetry. The artistic power of the pattern-designer is shown in the way he deals with the problem of 'repeat', and this is true of poetry likewise, and is probably the key (so far as one exists) to any technical definition or discussion of the art.

b. The product of this art as a form of literature; the writings of a poet or poets; poems collectively or generally; metrical work or composition; verse. (Opp. to prose)

It has been conjectured that point-blank represents a F. point blanc meaning the white point or white spot on the target, but no such use is found in F. or in any Romance lang. The phrase appears exclusively of English origin and use; and there is no evidence that in Eng. the 'blank' or 'white' was ever called the point blanc. The probability therefore is that blank is here the sh. (blank sb. a), and point the vb (POINT v. 1), referring to the pointing of the arrow or gun at the 'blank' or 'white', point-blank being a combination of the same class as break-neck, cut the oat, save-all, stop-gap, etc. It may have started as an adj., in point-blank shot, distance, reach, or range, i.e. that in which one points or aims at the blank or white spot.]

A. adv.

1. That points or aims straight at the mark, esp. in shooting horizontally; hence, aimed or fired horizontally; level, direct, straight; as in point-blank shot, fire, firing, trajectory. Point-blank distance, range, reach: the distance within which a gun may be fired horizontally at a mark; the distance the shot is carried before it drops appreciably below the horizontal plane of the bore.

(As to the inexactness of the notion that the course of the projectile is level, see POINT v. 1.)

1592 DICKESS Pan. m. 731 ... the point-blank range of the gunners, commonly termed the point-blank range, is the distance from the muzzle of the gun to the point-blank range of the gun, though without point-blank distance 1748 J. Mag.* XI. v. 327/a It is generally thought that the ball goes out of the piece in a straight line to a certain distance, which they call the point-blank shot. This is a mistake; for the ball immediately falls from the axis of the gun, the tangent of the curve described, though but unsensibly for a short time, but the line in which gunners take sight is usually contrived to make a small angle with the axis, so that, the ball will rise above the line of sight, and then, by the force of gravity, be made to fall again into it, at the place called the point-blank shot. 1818 HARRIS *Eng. Forms: see POINT sb. 1; 4-5 devys, 4-6 devyso, 5 devys, 5-7 deu-, devise, 6 devoyce, 5- devioce. [Orig. in ME. phrase at point devys, at point devys, app. representing an OF. or AF. phrase à point devys, not actually cited in Old French, which had however both the advb phrase à point 'to point, to the point aimed at, to the proper or utmost point or degree, to the point of perfection', and the word devys, as ppl. adj. 'devised, arranged', and as sb. 'a device, arrangement, will, wish, desire'. The construction in à point devys requires the adj. sense, so that the phrase may be construed either 'to (the) point arranged', or, as devys à point, 'arranged to a proper point or degree, arranged properly or to perfection'. The latter appears to M. Paul Meyer the better construction of the words

Poke, sb.⁴ Also 7 poak(e), pooke. [Of N. American Indian origin; in sense 1, app. the same as the Virginian word cited by early travellers as uppowoc, apooke, smoke, in Narraganset puck smoke, in sense 2, app. shortened from POOAN.]

It has been variously conjectured to be Nicotiana rustica (see quot. 1865); Antennaria plantaginifolia (in Britton & Brown Flora Northern U.S. III. Index, called 'Indian tobacco'; 'Ladies' tobacco'); A. margaritifera (see quot. 1865); and Lobelia inflata, very commonly referred to as 'Indian tobacco'.

1799 T. HERIOT in Hakluyt Voy III. 271 There is an herb called by the inhabitants uppowoc, the Spaniards call it tobacco 1695 W. STRACHEY Hist. Trav. Virginia 121 There is here great store of tobacco which the salvages call apooke. 1634 Relat. Ld. Baltimore's Plantation (Maryland) (1865) 20 After this, was brought a great bag, filled with a large Tobacco-pipe and Poake, which is the word they use for our Tobacco. 1651 R. CHILD in Harl. MS. Legacy (1655) 155, I have far greater hopes of the flourishing of this wild plant, than of Tobacco (either of that which in New-England is called Poak, much differing from the Virginian, or of that other commonly used and sown in Virginia). 1672 JOSSELYN New Eng. New Hampshire III. 125 A running vine, bearing a small berry, and a round leaf, which Josselyn (who wrote in 1672) says, the fishermen called poke, it is known to the hunters by the name of Indian tobacco. 1865 TUCKERMAN Josselyn's N. Eng. Rarities 85 (note to quot. 1672, above) The weak tobacco, cultivated by the Indians was not colt's-foot, but Nicotiana rustica L., well known to have been long in cultivation among the American savages. The name poke, or poake,—if it be, as is supposable, the same with puck 'smoke' of the Narraganset vocabulary of R. Williams, was perhaps always indefinite 1867 The species intended by Josselyn [referred to by him as 'Live-for-ever, a kind of cud-weed'] is our everlasting. The dried herb [was] used by the fishermen instead of tobacco, and no doubt called by them poake.

See Malus in Nouveau Bulletin des Sciences No 42, March 1819, p 252 Lumière polarisée. Also ibid, No 45, June 1819, p 292 (transl) 'In giving to these sides [of the vertical ray] the name of poles, he calls the modification which imparts to light properties relative to these poles, polarisation. This new expression signifies simply the modification that light has undergone in acquiring new properties, relative not to the direction of the ray, but solely to its sides, considered at a right angle, and in a plane perpendicular to its direction'. But this unfortunately assumed a sense of pole quite different from its use in astronomy, geography, and magnetism, with the consequence that polarisation as applied to light and radiant heat has nothing in common with magnetic or electric polarization.

I. 1. Optics. (trans) To cause the vibrations of light (radiant heat, etc.) to be modified in a particular way, so that the ray exhibits different properties on different sides, opposite sides being alike, and those at right angles to each other showing the maximum of difference.

A ray of polarized light is reflected in different degrees in different positions of the reflecting body, and transmitted by certain crystals in different degrees in different positions of the crystal, and (in each case) completely quenched in one particular position. This is accounted for by supposing the etherial vibrations to be restricted to one plane (plane polarisation), instead of being, as in ordinary light, performed in all directions perpendicular to that of the ray. Light is also said to be circularly or elliptically polarized, or to undergo circular or elliptic polarization, when it exhibits (in a polariscope) certain colour-phenomena, or modifications of the phenomena of plane polarization, which are accounted for by supposing the etherial particles to move in circles or ellipses. Polarization is produced (variously) in the case of different media by reflection, or by ordinary or double refraction.

3. The regulation, discipline, and control of a community; civil administration, enforcement of law, public order.

The early quotations refer to France, and other foreign countries, and to Scotland, where Commissioners of Police, for the general internal administration of the country, consisting of six noblemen and four gentlemen, were appointed by Queen Anne, 13 Dec 1714. This was app the first official use of the word in Great Britain. In England, it was still viewed with disfavour after 1760. A writer in the British Magazine, April 1763, p. 542, opines that 'from an aversion to the French and something under the name of police being already established in Scotland, English prejudice will not soon be reconciled to it' (The name Commissioners of Police, or Police Commission, was in the 19th c given to the local bodies having control of the Police force in Burghs and Police Burghs in Scotland).

These formerly included a court-room in which offenders were tried, as well as a place of detention in which they were confined till trial; hence the name was formerly regularly applied to what is now called a Police court, and is still in many places applied to a POLICE STATION, when this has a place of detention. The earliest name was PUBLIC OFFICE (in Act of 1792). Police office appears to have been first applied to the Marine or Thames Police Office at Wapping. (See Police sb. 5, Marine Police.)

orig. 'A clinic held in private houses in the town, as opposed to one held in a hospital' (Syd. Soc. Lex. 1895). Subsequently often extended to a dispensary, or that department of a hospital, at which out-patients are treated. Cf. POLICLINIC.

The original system continues at smaller places in Germany, e.g. at Jena, in larger cities, e.g. Leipzig, the latter obtains. Cf. Brockhaus Konvers.-Lex. (1846) s.v. Klinik. 'Poliklinik' [as distinguished from the stationäre klinik or hospital treatment of in-patients, and ambulatorische klinik or hospital treatment of out-patients] consists in the fact that the patients are treated in their own dwellings, by the advanced medical students, while the professor, to whom these regularly report and who supervises the whole treatment of the patient, himself but seldom visits them.

Polka (pōlkā), sb. 1 [= F. and Ger. polka of uncertain origin. The dance being of Bohemian origin (orig. called Nimra), it has been suggested that polka was a corruption of Czech polka half, 'a characteristic feature being its short half steps'. Another suggestion is that the actual form, whether or not altered from polka, is due to the Polish Polka, fem. of Polak a Pole: cf. polonaise (also a dance), and mazurka.]

1. A lively dance of Bohemian origin, the music for which is in duple time.

Danced at Prague in 1835, at Vienna 1839, Paris 1840, London in the spring of 1842. see Memoirs of Anna M. W. Pickering (1903) xvi. Polka-mazurka, a modification of the mazurka dance to the movement of a polka.

They were played at Devonshire House the day of the grand fete. 1867 Miss BRADDON R. Godwin I. 1 16 The guard's horn playing a joyous polka made itself heard among the trees.

3. On account of the popularity of the dance, polka was prefixed as a trade name to articles of all kinds (cf. quot. 1898 in 1); e.g. the polka curtain-band (for looping up curtains), polka-gauze, polka hat; polka-dot, a pattern consisting of dots of uniform size and arrangement.

Polygon (pŏl'i gŏn), sŏ, and a. Also 7 poly-gone. [ad. L. polygonum, a Gr. πολυγώνον, prop. neut. of πολυγώνος adj. polygonal, f. πολυ-, POLY- + γωνος, from stem of γωνία angle. Cf. f. polygone, a. polygone (Colgr. 1611). Used at first in Latin forms polygŏnum, polygŏnium]

A. sŏ. 1. Geom. A figure (usually, a plane rectilinear figure) having many, i. e. (usually) more than four, angles (and sides); a many-sided figure.

Complete polygon, a polygon in which lines are drawn connecting each angular vertex with every one of the others. Stellated polygon, a polygon which wraps its interior more than once, the continuous joining of alternate or more remote angles, producing a stellate or starlike figure, as in the PRYTHAGORAS (q. v.) which is a stellated pentagon wrapping its interior twice. So with similar figures of 7, 8, 9, 10, etc. points, in which the variety of form increases with the number of different points that can be continuously joined

b. Polygon of forces: a polygonal figure illustrating a theorem relating to a number of forces acting at one point, each of which is represented in magnitude and direction by one of the sides of the figure, analogous to the parallelogram of forces; hence, the theorem itself. So polygon of velocities, etc.

(Distinguished from ISOMERIC.)

1847 TURNER Elem. Chem. (ed. 8) 175 The second case of isomerism is that of bodies in which, while the relative proportion of the elements are the same, the absolute number of atoms of each element, and consequently the equivalent or atomic weights of the compounds, differ. Such compounds are called polymeric. 1850 DAUBENY Atom. The. viii (ed. 2) 265 Olefant gas and cetene are polymeric bodies. 1880 J. W. LEGG Bile 233 Asserted to be polymeric with bilirubin.

[A name which arose in the Dutch Indies in 17th c., and is given by early writers as the Dutch name of the fruit. Du. pompelmoes is recorded from 1676, F. pampelmousse (now pampelmousse) from 1606.

There is no native name in Malaysia resembling pompelmoes; the Javanese name is aper oek, the Chinese syn. In the opinion of Dr. Kern of Leiden, who has given special attention to oriental words, this is a compound, of which the second element is prob. limos (in Fr. orthographe limosse), a name applied to this fruit in Old Javanese, Malay, and Lampung, borrowed from the Pg. limos pl. of liman, lemon, citron, under which the Portuguese included the species of Citrus found by them in the East. In Malay, liman or liman is still used in this general sense. The first element may prob. represent the Du. pompeon pumpkin, in reference to the large size of Citrus decumana, so that pompelmoes, pampelmousse may have been compressed forms of pompelmoes, i. e. 'pumpkin-like citron', an apt descriptive designation. The name pompone was actually applied to the fruit by Tavernier, Voyages aux Indes, Paris 1676, Eng. translation, London 1677: see POMPION 2. The corrupt Tamil bambolmas, given by Litré and Hatz-Darm as source of the Fr., with the more correct Tamil pampalmāsai, and numerous variants cited by Watson, Yule, etc., are merely corruptions of the Du. or Fr. form. The fruit is not native to India, but was introduced from Java (app in the 17th c.), in Ceylon under its Dutch name; in Bengal its source is indicated by the designation Balaw-nimbi oi nebi, Batavian Citron.]

Sometimes the proceeds of the traffic on competing lines are put into a common fund, and afterwards distributed according to conditions previously agreed on. This is called a 'financial pool'. In other cases, arrangements are made for a distribution of the traffic, each line agreeing to accept a specified proportion. This is called a 'Physical Pool'. 1887 Pall Mall G. 11 Oct. 12/1 Salt is the latest commodity placed under the control of a pool in the United States. [Note In Eng use this word has undoubtedly from the 18th c. been identified with Pool s.v. 1, see quot. 17, 1766 in sense 1, with their references to the fish in the pool. But the French use of poule for the same thing, with the fact that the French is found earlier, makes it almost certain that the term was taken from Fr., and associated with the Eng. word pool. F. poule is held to be a sense of poule hen, chicken, being perh. at first slang for 'booty, spoil, plunder'. Mme. de Sévigné in a letter of 20 July 1676 uses poule exactly in the sense of Eng. pool; and in a letter of 30 June 1680 says 'Si Denjean est de ce jeu, il prendra toutes les poules, c'est un angle', a play upon the sense 'hen'. The Dict of the Académie, ed. 1, 1694, and that of Furetière, ed. 2, 1701, also explain poule almost in the words in which it stands in the Dict. Acad. ed. 7, 1787, 'Poule se dit à certains jeux, de la quantité d'argent ou de jetons qui résulte de la mise de chacun des joueurs et qui appartient à celui qui gagne le coup. La poule est grosse. Mettre à la poule. Gagner la poule'. There is perh. a similar relation between F. pêche a fish at cards, and the Eng. 'fish' in the 'pool'.]

The mod. Eng. poor and Sc. poor represent the ME. pōre: with mod. vulgar pore, cf. whore and the pronunciation of door, floor.

On account of the ambiguity of the letter v and its variant u before h, it is uncertain whether ME. pouere, pouere, pouere, meant pou- or pou-. The phonetic series pauper, pauvre, pauvre, pauvre, pauvre, shows that pouere preceded pauvre, which may have been reached in late OF., and is the form in various mod.F. dialects. But the 15th and early 16th c. literary Fr. form was pauvre, artificially spelt in 15th c. pauvre, after L. pauper, and ME. pōre (the source of mod. Eng. poor) seems to have been reduced from pouere like over from over, lord from lord. Cf. also POORTRY, POORAL, POVERTY. But some Eng. dialects now have pour (paur), which prob. represents ME. pour (pū),]

The genesis of the compound is not very clear, unless it began as short for porco spinoso:—L. type porcus spinus* spiny or prickly pig. The β, γ, and δ forms appear to be English corruptions, due to imperfect apprehension of the foreign word, and to 'popular etymology' identifying the ending with pen, point, etc.; the type portepyne may have arisen out of F. porc(c) d'espīn, with c mute. The ε forms really represent a different compound, viz. F. porc-ēpn, in 16th c. porc-espīc, OF. and Pr. porc-espī (13th c. in Littré), in which the second element is F. ēpi, OF. espī = L. spīcus, -um, collateral forms of spīca spike. (This form, confined to Fr. and Pr., was prob. an alteration of porc espīn.)

The actual origin of the name Porphyra is disputed. 1614 SLIDEN Titles Hon. 82 There he found Ilene the Emperesse, in a house anciently appointed for the Emperesses children. Cediens will have the word to signify, born in the purple palace, or the palace of porphyry, a palace so called in Constantinople; wherein the emperresses used to lie in. Others derive the appellation hence, that the imperial children, as soon as born, were wrapped in purple, others, that the chamber wherein they were born was hung with purple hangings. 1788 GIBSON Decl. & F. (1790) IX. xlviii 57 In the Greek language purple and porphyry are the same word. An apartment of the Byzantine palace was lined with porphyry: it was reserved for the use of the pregnant emperresses, and the royal children of their children was expressed by the appellation of porphyrogeniti, or born in the purple. This peculiar surname was first applied to Constantine the seventh. 1832 SCOTT Cl. Robt. iii. Anna Comnena an imperial Princess, porphyrogenita, or born in the sacred purple chamber. 1857 Sir R. Hence Porphyrogenitism, the doctrine of succession in a royal family which prefers a son born after his father's accession to one born before that event; Porphyrogeniture, the condition of being born 'in the purple' (see above).

1857 Sir F. The word used to render L. porphyritēs, Gr. porphyrēs, the name given to a beautiful and very hard rock anciently quarried in Egypt, composed of crystals of white or red plagioclase feldspar embedded in a fine red ground-mass consisting of hornblende, plagioclase, apatite, thulite, and witherite, the last two being bright red in colour. By modern poets often used vaguely, in the sense of a beautiful and valuable purple stone taking a high polish, including red granite and marble.

The site of the ancient quarries, after being long lost, was discovered by Burton and Wilkinson at Gebel Dokhān, near the Red Sea, in lat. 27° 30' N.

In It., porfirio nero, porfirio verde, were applied to black and green rocks of porphyritic structure obtained from Sardinia, Greece, and elsewhere, and these have been Englished as black and green porphyry.

b. In more general sense. Any unstratified or igneous rock having a homogeneous base in which crystals of one or more minerals are disseminated.

Various species as felspar porphyry (= a), basaltic, claystone, granitic, greenstone, hornstone, mica, pitchstone, trachytic porphyry, etc. Quartz porphyry has as ground-mass an intimate mixture of orthoclase and quartz, containing distinct crystals or large grains of quartz.

The name is sometimes applied even to rocks in which the porphyritic crystals are absent. Many limitations or definitions of the term have been proposed by modern mineralogists, continental and British, but without any general agreement as to the basis of definition. See, in English, SIR A. GEIKIE Text-bk. Geol. (ed. 1885) 149, Prof. BONNY in Proc. Geol. Soc. (1886) XXI 72, Harper Petrology for Students (ed. 1902) 126, etc.

[Note. The extension of the sense 'haven' or 'harbour-town' to an inland town presents difficulties, though an explanation has been sought in the definition of L. portus, in the Digest L. xvi. (De verb. signif.) 59 'Portus appellatur est conclusus locus, quod importanter merces et inde expoiuntur; eaque nihilo minus statio est conclusa atque munita'. The transference of sense from 'gate' to 'walled town with gates' is also unlikely. Inasmuch as Port and Port, though representing respectively L. portus and porta, were both masc. in OE., the fact that this port was also masc. affords no evidence either way. The MFL. words are in a similar position: these port 'haven' and porte (later poort) 'gate' are both fem. and, port 'town' being also fem., the gender gives no indication. But the oldest and prevalent form of the word was port or poort, porte being unusual and late, and prob. due to confusion with porte 'gate'; Verwijs and Verdam take it therefore as certain that port 'town' represented L. portus, and if this was so in Flemish, it was doubtless so also in OE. The Netherlands word was extensively used down to c. 1500, and had numerous derivatives (of which poortier citizen, poort- or poorteregg burgess-ship, citizenship, are still in use). Cf. also PORTERY.]

If the OE. port survived into ME. (which is doubtful), it was then merged in the Fr. word, which became in Sc. the ordinary word for the gate of a town or city.]

Port (pōrt), sb. 6 (a.) Naut. [Derivation obscure see Note below.]

1. The left-hand side of a ship looking forward: = LARBOARD sb. Opposed to STARBOARD. (Often in phr. to port, A-PORT.)

In recent times generally substituted for the older larboard to obviate misunderstandings arising from the similarity in sound of starboard and larboard. By international convention, ships, esp. steamers, carry a red light on the port side.

1625-44 MANWAYRING Sea-mans Dict., To Port. Is a word used in Conding the Ship, they will use the word steady a-Port, or Steady a Star-board, the Ship heeles to Port: bring things neere to port, or the like. 1633 T. STARBOARD Pac. Hib iii. viii (1821) 562 With two takles hee might steere the Hoy either to Starboard or to Port. 1748 ANSON'S Voy. i. x. 104 The ship heeled...two streaks to port. 1813 SOUTHEY Nelson i. iii. 124 They...put the helm a-port, and stood after her again. 1844 Admty. Order 22 Nov., The word 'Port' is frequently substituted for the word 'Larboard', and as the distinction between 'Starboard' and 'Port' is so much more marked than that between 'Starboard' and 'Larboard', it is their Lordships direction that the word 'Larboard' shall no longer be used. 1846 U.S. Navy Department Notice 18 Feb., It having been repeatedly represented to the Department that confusion arises from the use of the words 'larboard' and 'starboard' in consequence of their similarity of sound, the word 'port' is hereafter to be substituted for 'larboard'. 1875 BEDFORD Sailor's Pocket Bk. iii. (ed. 2) 61 If two sailing ships are meeting end-on, so as to involve risk of collision, the helms of both shall be put to port, so that each may pass on the port side of the other. 1884 Fall Mail G. 25 Aug. 8/2 The port bow of the Camden struck the port of the Dione between her rigging.

2 attrib. or as adj. Situated on, or turned towards the left side of a ship: = LARBOARD B.

1857 R. TOMES Amer. in Japan vii. 119 It was thought better to stand off from the port tack, in order to get well clear of the land. 1857 DURFERIN Lett. High Lat. (ed. 3) 226 A promising opening was reported...a mile or so away on the port-bow. 1875 BRIDGON Sailor's Pocket Bk. I. (ed. 2) 21 The Port Wing Ship of a Column is the ship on its extreme left. 1883 Law Times Rep. XLIX. 329/1 The Clan Sinclair, was about to round Blackwall Point under a port helm. Mod. A green light seen on your port bow shows that a vessel is approaching on your left front on a transverse course (the green light being shown from the starboard side of that vessel).

[Note. This use of port may have arisen either from PORT sb. 1, senses 1, 2, or from PORT sb. 1, sense 2. When the steering apparatus was on the right side of the vessel (the starboard or starboard), it would be convenient, in order to leave this free, to have the port (entering port) on the opposite side (the larboard or larboard). For the same reason, the vessel when in port, would naturally be placed so as to lie with her larboard alongside or facing the shore or port. For either reason, the larboard would be the port side. Port for larboard was in recorded use more than two centuries before it became official; the existence of PORT v. 2 indicates a still earlier colloquial use.]
